FITZ ON ATHLETICS. Says He Will Fight Again and Then

Says He Won't. "I intend to devote the rest of my life to the upbuilding of American physical manhood." Such is the declaration of Robert Fitzsimmons, the famous pugilist, after his last fight with Jeffries. And it is declared that he said this in the earnest manner of a newly ordained minister full of his work, who feels the fire of purpose burning within. "Young Americans, physically, are the best developed race in the world,' the Portland Telegram quotes him as saying, "I know, because I have been training them and have compared them with those of other nations. "What more splendid heritage can a man have than good health? He may have the wealth of Morgan, but he can not enjoy it with poor health. Our whole social fabric rests upon good health. Healthy fathers and healthy mothers mean healthy children. A great deal of crime and ignorance are due to ill-health. It is hard for one to be good when one's mind is in a constant state of irritation by reason of ill-health. Give our youth good health 4 2 and unless they are moral degenerates 6 4 and so too greatly handicapped, they livan; will become better men, better brothers and justice and causing a gradual evo-lution toward a better social plane. To > his way in the world is like tying a millstone around his neck and expecting him to swim. "Most reporters want me to talk about the ring. But physical culture is my hobby, and I'm glad to get a chance to talk about it. There is no excuse for any person-unless he is tainted with an incurable disease-remaining sickly as long as there is plenty of fresh air about and a place to exer-

give a youth a brilliant intellect and a sickly body and expect him to make

'What is the best exercise?' "The breathing exercise. In the first place, people should sleep with their windows open. They are then less likely to catch cold. The first thing after getting up in the morning they should throw something warm about them and go to the open window and dred people attended today's races at | draw the fresh air into their lungs contracting and expanding their chests This should be followed by a bath and exercise. It can all be done in an ordinary room without the aid of dumb bells or other appliances. Even if the bath is not handy, everyone can take the breathing exercise and swing their arms about, unbending the body at the same time. Five, ten or fifteen minutes passed in this fashion every morn ing will make even a broken down business man feel like a new person. "The trouble is with most people that they don't like to take the time to do this. They walt until the last moment to arise, then hurriedly swallow their breakfast and rush to work. Some o hem try it for awhile and then drot to their old habits. It seems strange that a business man will suffer all day with a headache and extreme irritation, which could have been saved by about five minutes' exercise in the morning. Every minister should teach these things from the pulpit, every up to date newspaper should have a department teaching the benefits of physical culture, and every school in the land should make it part of the system. You will find that all medical men will agree with me on the subject. The average life of the American could be lengthened several years in one generation of proper physcal culture."

"How about the American youth omparing with those in other countries?" was asked.

"In spite of our more sensitive and finer organization," he answered, "and the high steam pressure under which we are driven by the sharp competition in the commercial world, a source demanding nerve power and energies that prove a greater tax upon the human body than is demanded in other countries, our young men are more perfectly developed than those of any other nation. There is more symmetry about the American constitution. I don't know whether I make myself quite clear, but the American youth has the ideal shape for perfection in physical culture.'
